The Master of Music degree allows qualified students to pursue advanced studies in music with an emphasis in music education, music pedagogy, or music performance. The degree offers students the opportunity to expand the depth and breadth of knowledge in their area of emphasis, develop research skills, and engage in career-related experiences. The Master of Music prepares students for professional careers as teachers and performers and serves as a foundation for pursuing doctoral studies in music.

The Master of Music degree with an emphasis in music education also offers an option leading to Texas music teacher certification. Additional information, including certification requirements, is available at the College of Professional Education (<https://catalog.twu.edu/graduate/professional-education/>).

The Master of Music Therapy Degree allows qualified students to pursue advanced studies in music therapy. The 36-hour degree dedicates 18 credit hours to graduate-level music therapy study and culminates with a thesis project. Students develop advanced skills in leadership, advocacy, administration, and clinical supervision.
