Texas Woman's University's Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) in Nursing Science program is for the nurse ready to assume or further a leadership position in nursing research. The Ph.D. prepared nurse demonstrates the ability to integrate nursing knowledge with that of other health care disciplines in order to research and solve problems, as well as to teach and mentor others. Ph.D. graduates engage in education focused on advanced nursing knowledge, investigative expertise, and the management skills needed to shape healthy policy and provide leadership in clinical, classroom, and community settings.

The program is offered from the Denton and Houston campuses in an online format that requires 3 or 4 synchronous online meetings and an annual two-day, in-person colloquium on either the Denton or Houston campus during the fall semester.
